Emma, I am emailing to voice my concern over the potential approval of Trinity Western Law School by our bar council.

I was quite vocal when this matter came up before counsel previously. Christa and I were of the view that we as a provincial bar society should exercise our own decision making process and not support the approval.

As I pointed out during the previous discussion, restricting admission into any program which supposedly trains lawyers to defend human rights, based on sexual orientation or activity, is discriminatory. How does one justify the training of young lawyers, who at their call swear to uphold the rule of law, who are educated in that environment?
